

This email includes my topic for the conference on March 17. First, I included a longer explanation of my topic. This expresses it better and sounds more appealing. I consolidated it to 25 words as well. It is the second one. Feel free to use either. Even if you need to use the shorter one, I felt that including the longer one would at least give you a better idea of my presentation.

"Most adults do not realize how the thinking of youth has changed. The postmodern culture has ushered in a different kind of thinking, one that is very different from the days of the "Brady Bunch," where children listened to their parents, and every episode ended with hugs and happiness. Come learn how to be more effective in communicating with your youth, and how to instill lasting values and morals for your children and youth battling life in this postmodern world. "

"The thinking of youth has changed dramatically. Learn to communicate more effectively with your youth and to instill lasting morals and values in their lives."

Bio's:

Elizabeth Whittinghill has a passion for equipping this generation to have lives of lasting influence. Elizabeth has a broad base of experience, being a professional cosmetologist and having studied in Colorado and London. She is currently a senior Communications major at Mississippi College.
