

“The Mississippi River has always served as a transportation lifeline for our nation, and that is still true today. The river provided the easiest and most direct route for the transport of material.”