Talking Points

- In January of 2000, I asked the people of Mississippi to imagine a computer at the fingertips of every child in our state.
- The opportunities for learning that a computer can provide for a child is amazing, and it is important that we provide those good learning opportunities to our students.
- The 100 Black Men of Jackson and Time Warner Cable know the importance of technology in our economy today.
- They know the values computers can bring to our students and our teachers.
- They know that today's economy requires a strong knowledge of technology, and our students must have a hands-on learning experience to learn those skills.
- I would like to congratulate these two organizations on the partnership they have formed.
- They are investing in education, investing in their community and investing in Mississippi.
